It appeared from the evidence of the captain, that the defendant was steward and bad refused to furnish the Captain with a lamp when requested to do so, and became very insolent, also using threatening language, whereupon Capt. Mr Thomsett was of opinion that the Gate and Steam Pumps, is in complete working charge against these six men had not been order, and is well supplied with every description, proved, notwithstanding that the chief and second mates corroborated the Captain's statement, and discharged the defendants, asking Captain Clements whether it was his intention to proceed to Ningpo with the same crew or would be give them their discharge. The Captain thought that encouraged in their conduct they would perhaps behave even worse than before, consequently he agreed to discharge them. In Courts of Justice it is right that some place should be set spart where members of the press can take a report of the proceedings, and we know no reason why the Ma- | Sale rine Magistrate's Court should be an excention. Here however there is no reporter's desk, it is therefore impossible, no matter how. mportant a case may be, to give a report is extenso. We trust that this will be remedied.

The Case of the Saxon. As a British subject actually lost his life at the bands of a Rederal officer on board the Soxon, the history of the seizure of that ship is of much more interest and importance than that of captures which have subjected British subjects to nothing more than inconvenience or loss of property. Lord DERBY did no more than his duty in pressing for the publication of the papers relating to the Saren at the earliest possible moment. It is the proper function of the Opposition to call on the Government to show the course it has taken in matters of such great national concern, and nothing can be more absurd, or show a more total misconception of the distribution of duties under the Parliamentary system, than to denounce the vigilance shown by the Opposition on such occasions as hostile and factious. It is not enough that the Government should have acted rightly; it must be shown and known to have acted rightly. Any impartial critic would be ready to admit that the view adopted by the Government in regard to the Sazon, and to the events that occurred on board her, and in connexion with her capture, was the proper one; but it is quite as much to the advantage of the Government as of any one else that this should be put beyond doubt. The leading facts of the case are as follows. The Federal war-steamer Fanderbitt left the Cape on the 11th of September last in search of the diabame and Georgia, but was not successful, and returned to Table Bay to coal on the 27th of October. The Governor of the Cape. Sir P . WoneHouse, however, refused to let her take any coals'on board, as she had received supplies of coal there within three months, and t permit a further supply before the period of three months had clansed wou'd be at variance with the general instructions issued to Colonial Govarnors. She accordingly went northward to the goano island of ichaboe, and the islands adjacent to it, and se it was rumoured that it was her intention to search British ships at Ichaboe, Sir BALDWIN WALKER very properly sent an English man-ofwar to prevent the search being made within British territories, The Vanderbilt, however, did not go to Ichaboe, but to an island about heen sent there for the convenience of the Alabana.
